Mr. Editor, in concluding this article, for the present, I will hope that I have shown to all rational minds that we can not prosper, or make "headway," without mechanics. I repeat, we cannot have a successful, industrial exhibition without earnestly engaging and enlisting the mechanics and artisans in Memphis and everywhere else. The best way to enlist them is to encourage and promote their immediate interest. The first steep I suggest towards this consummation is to get up a well organized Mechanics' Society in Memphis, and the second step is to lay the foundation for a Mechanics' Institute, and the third step is to hanish forever hereafter the appellation of "He is only a mechanic."

The two theaters of this city, both excellent of their kind, each having peculiarizing that are recognized and approved in other cities, have chosen to dechare war against each other. By no other means could the peculiar excellencies of each establishment be made so widely known, and by no other device could the public be induced to give so large a share of attention to theatrical affairs. The "war" has, to a great extent, subsided, in good, and in the future adhesion of both establishments to the rules of deco-rum and perfect deeney in words and
